Fire Insurance Rate Cut One Advantage

Ashville's council, Monday evening, after listening to an able and forceful discussion of the possibilities of waterworks improvement for the village under provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act, passed a resolution to make application for a loan for the construction of village waterworks and sanitary sewer system. The estimated costs of both projects is approximately $38,000.

An overflow crowd of interested citizens were present at the council chamber and heard Mr. H. H. H. explain in detail the plan of the Recovery Act as it applied to the installation and financing of these public utilities. Quite a number of questions were asked the speaker by interested visitors and thus the subject was thoroughly discussed.

FIGURES STUDIED
The financial plan selected, the third one of the project, provides for the issuing of bonds against the income of the utilities, rather than a bond issue against the tax duplicate. These bonds will bear four per cent interest and will probably run over an average period of 20 years.

Burgess and Niple, civil and sanitary engineers of Columbus, were employed by council to make necessary application, surveys and plans for water plant and sewer installation. Mr. Burgess attended the meeting and took a leading part in the discussions. He had prepared a partial plan of the village and was able to speak with authority as to approximate costs of the contemplated improvement. The estimates presented by Mr. Burgess call for $40,000 for water works and $38,000 for sewers, a total of $78,000. Deducting the 30 per cent, the gift of the government, leaves $54,600 as the approximate cost of both projects.

Mr. Burgess has had 25 years experience in this class of work and has the best of recommendations as to efficiency and honesty.

TO SINK WELLS
The tentative plan calls for the sinking of possibly two 8-inch wells and the erection of a large storage tank, the location of which is yet to be decided. "We anticipate no trouble in securing a good supply of pure water which will possibly not require treatment," Mayor E. E. Fraunfelder declared.

F. G. Hudson, Ashville insurance agent, presented figures as to the probable decrease in insurance rates once the waterworks system was completed. These savings are worth while.

The specifications for bids on the contemplated work will contain the stipulation that 65 per cent of the labor required shall be local.

The two Douglas farms in Ross-co were also sold, Monday, but a house and lot at Fifth and Paints, Chillicothe, also included in the estate, failed to bring any bids.

J. W. Bolender, also of Chillicothe, bought 157 1-2 acres on the county line road, a mile and a half east of Kingston, for $7,510. It was appraised at $9,315. A 62-acre tract across the road from this farm brought no bids.

CHICAGO, July 18.—As if the 6,100-mile flight from Orbetello, Italy, via Labrador to a Century of Progress were nothing more than routine flying, Gen. Italo Balbo looked around today for something to really try the mettle of his 24 "Gallies."

He believes he has found it in a non-stop hop from Newfoundland to Ireland. Unless a study of weather maps in New York convinces him that insurmountable hazards block the way that is the route he and his 24 silver hydroplanes will take back to the Orbetello air base.

This was learned from persons close to the air minister in the Mussolini cabinet, who said he would take the safer but longer Azores route only if forced to do so by continued unfavorable weather.

Italian May Lead 24-Plane Squadron On Hazardous Non-Stop Tour.

CHICAGO, July 18.—As if the 6,100-mile flight from Orbetello, Italy, via Labrador to a Century of Progress were nothing more than routine flying, Gen. Italo Balbo looked around today for something to really try the mettle of his 96 "eagles."

He believes he has found it in a non-stop hop from Newfoundland to Ireland. Unless a study of weather maps in New York convinces him that insurmountable hazards block the way that is the route he and his 24 silver hydroplanes will take back to the Orbetello air base.

152,000 GET WORK

Naval, Highway, Trail Building Studied

WASHINGTON, July 18.—Public works sufficient to provide one-year's work for 152,000 men directly and indirect employment to thousands of others had been authorized by the federal public works board today.

The job-creation projects already approved will be in full swing within 30 days, officials said, following announcement of the distribution of $64,425,000 public works money for federal projects and additional highway allotments.

The cabinet board still is far from the goal of providing work for 1,000,000 men directly and indirectly by Oct. 1, but greater speed in the allotment of money was promised upon completion of state organizations.

152,000 TO WORK

At least 100,000 men will be given direct employment on highways, 42,000 more in forest trails and roads, 18,400 in naval construction and 21,500 on federal projects. The peak of the jobs will find far more than 152,000 at work, the total being upon an even spread of employment for a year.

The federal public works program is expected to be definitely settled within the next two weeks. Having rejected the rivers and harbors, flood control and public buildings proposals of government departments, the cabinet board awaited a revision of these plans.

President Roosevelt is expected to take a hand in settling the question of federal public works.

REVISE BUILDING LIST

In accordance with the president's decree that public buildings shall not be constructed at "cross roads towns," the cabinet board asked Director of the Budget Lewis Douglas to revise the treasury's proposed post office and federal building list.

Secretary of the Interior Ickes, administrator of public works, expects to name regional administrators and state advisory committees this week. The board then will consider disbursement of $1,500,000,000 for useful public works in all parts of the country, including state, county and municipal projects.

C. OF C. TO SEEK PLAYGROUND FUND

To Concentrate Efforts For Federal Help; Details Are Explained.

Plans to concentrate on an effort to obtain necessary funds from the government with which to provide a public playground were outlined Monday evening when directors of the Chamber of Commerce met.

Means of obtaining a grant from the government through its program were investigated last week by K. J. Herrmann and were presented to the directors.

The necessary steps will be taken at once by the Chamber of Commerce.

Not much thought is being given to the possible site for the playground until definite knowledge of whether or not the money will be available is learned. Several excellent sites are thought available. The need of a playground with a swimming pool, tennis courts, recreation ball field, and other features is generally recognized here.

The directors are also investigating the possibility of obtaining financial aid for an airport and are learning what is being done in the matter of flood control of the Scioto river.

RAY BLADES

With the Red Birds making a determined bid for pennant honors in the American Association, Columbus fans are giving a large share of the credit to Ray Blades. Blades has not only passed on his aggressiveness to the team, but has proven his fielding and hitting ability. Blades came to Columbus from the St. Louis Cardinals. He will bring his team back to its own Stadium on July 22 for a series of 27 games that may make or break Columbus' pennant hopes. He has been in organized baseball thirteen years and in addition to the Cardinals, has seen service with Memphis, Houston and Rochester.

CHINCH BUG LOSS IS WORST IN 15 YEARS

Chinch bug damage to crops in central and northwestern Ohio is worse this year than in 15 years, according to reports of farmers to T. H. Parks, extension specialist in entomology for the Ohio State University. Whole fields of corn are being destroyed by the beetles as they migrate from wheat and barley fields.

The destructive marches began about July 1. Population of bugs was augmented this year, explains Parks, by the unusually dry summer weather. Drought is favorable to chinch bug development, and in areas that are the driest, damage is the greatest.

Worst damage is in fields of corn adjoining spring barley. In many places the bugs destroyed the barley and migrated immediately to adjacent corn fields. Many farmers saved their corn fields by laying down barriers of a tar containing cresote.

Upon approaching the lines of tar surrounding the fields, the bugs hesitated and accumulated, and each day they were destroyed by torch fire. Temporary barriers of dust were used successfully until tar could be procured. Within a few days, says Parks, the march of destruction will have ended. The bugs will take to their wings and disperse.

Severe damage was reported from Madison, Champaign, Union, Delaware, Franklin, Licking, Fairfield, Hardin, Hancock, Lucas, Wood, and Morrow cos.

"MARY FAITH"

by Beatrice Burton

COPYRIGHT, 1931, BY KING FEATURES SYNDICATE, INC.

SYNOPSIS

Mary Faith, comely young orphan, is secretary to Mark Nesbit, wealthy business man. She gives up her position to marry Kimberley Farrell, shiftless young lawyer. Mary Faith believes that loving a man hard enough will make everything come out all right in the end. It was this confidence that enabled her to marry Kim after he had once broken their engagement. She realizes he has an eye for every girl, but hopes that married life will sober him and make him successful in his profession. Instead, Kim is annoyed at Mary Faith's "Puritanism," and his jazzy friends, Claire and Jack Maldon, find her a dull companion. Learning that she is to become a mother, Mary Faith, for the first time, visits Kim's office. Kim is furious when Mary Faith finds him flirting with his blond secretary. That night, he informs his mother and Mary Faith that he is leaving. Mary Faith, heart-broken at this turn of affairs, decides not to tell Kim of her coming motherhood. She and Mrs. Farrell decide to struggle to keep the home for the coming baby. Mary Faith obtains a position as typist. Due to Mary Faith making good Kim's debt to his former employers, Kim is reinstated.

CHAPTER XXVI

"And are you going to stay here now, Kimberley?" his mother asked him.

"No." His lips came together with a snap. "No—I'm more sure than ever that it was a mistake for Mary Faith and me to be married. I came here tonight because I wanted to talk to her about divorcing me. It's not right for us to be tied up to each other when we've stopped caring for each other. You feel that way about it yourself, don't you, Mary Faith?"

Mary Faith sat in rigid agony on the very edge of her chair, her hands clasped tightly in her lap.

Her dark blue eyes were very big in her white face and there were faint shadows under them. Her lips scarcely moved as she spoke.

"I don't know, Kim."

"You don't know?" He was exasperated. "What do you mean, you don't know?"

"Well, I don't believe in divorce, Kim. And don't you remember what we promised each other the day we were married?—To live together all our lives."

"Look here, Mary Faith, I'm not going to sit here and argue the fine points of the marriage service with you," said Kim, dismissing his marriage vows with a wave of his hand. "I came here to ask you to divorce me. I don't care about you the way I did, and you seem to be getting along fairly well without me. You have my mother on your side."

"You talk as if I were your enemy, and I'm not," Mary Faith interrupted him quietly. "I love you, Kim, and I'm not going to give you up to that Janet-woman without a struggle. Last year when you came to me and told me you couldn't live without her I gave you up—and three months later you married me. Now you want to give me up, and marry her, I suppose. . . . But I think you ought to wait a while and find out how you really feel about her and about me. Time can settle a lot of things that nothing else on earth can settle, Kim."

He lost his temper then. "You talk like a fool," he said, furious with anger. "You talk to me as if I were a child that didn't know its own mind. Now see here, I'm going through with this thing."

"All right," Mary Faith broke in upon him once more. "You'll have to do it, Kim. I care for you too much to give you up, and besides, I know you'll not be happy with that girl. You don't love her. . . . You just think that you do because she follows you around and it flatters you to have her do it. If you really loved her the way you think you do you would have married her 'way last fall when you were as free as air, Kim Farrell!"

"If you feel like this about her in six months, I'll listen to you, Kim," she said.

She got up and started out of the room, and he looked after her, wondering how a creature so yielding and gentle by nature, could be so stubborn and determined all at once. At the door she turned and faced him once more.

"If you feel like this about her in six months I'll listen to you, Kim," she said. "It's July now. You come to me again in February."

In February the baby would be a month old.

The months of the summer dragged by. Heat shimmered above the pavements of Spring Street every day in a parched August. The long days were all alike to Mary Faith except that one day she might have lettuce and rye bread sandwiches in her lunch and the next day there might be deviled egg and white bread. One week she might be reading "The Great Gatsby" and the next one she might have "Joanna Golden" open on her typewriter while she ate her lunch.

On the first Monday in September—Labor Day—it rained as it always does on holidays, and Mrs. Farrell went down to Garrettsville on the bus to spend a week with Aunt Ella. She came back to town on the following Monday with yards and yards of white cloth of different kinds—flannel for the baby's nightgowns, sheet muslin for the tiny dresses, and soft cotton for the underthings.

"I bought it down there for half what we'd have to pay for it up here in town," she said as she showed it to Mary Faith. "We'll make it all up by hand, what do you say? I do like to see dainty little stitches in baby clothes."

On the first of October Mary Faith gave up her position with Florine Bond. She and Mrs. Farrell spent the rest of that blue-and-russet month cleaning-house and painting a small white bed that they found in a second-hand store on River Street.

In November they settled down to make the clothes for the baby. They ate their meals in the kitchen, and played in apartment house scenes. All of the furniture in the living room is designed around a painting. Each color in the picture is brought out in some particular bit of furniture, which produces a very striking effect.

AT THE CLIFTONA

This is just one of the many thrills contained in Walter Futter's amazing production of high adventure and romance in the Far East, featuring the noted globe-trotting author, Richard Halliburton, which appears on the screen of the Cliftona Theatre today and Wednesday.

During one sequence of this talking picture, Halliburton starts on a death-defying search for romance. He is led through python jungles into a region swarming with unbelicably great hordes of the deadly flying mammals.

The bats descend about 1100 feet in what is literally a cloud. The camera caught one flight that easily numbered a million vampire bats in one episode. The author finds himself insidiously lured by one of the creatures.

According to the producer of "India Speaks," this is the first time that motion pictures have ever been obtained of vampire bats in action, and the sequence forms one of the most thrilling of the many scenes in the production.

Anthrax, Once Common, Rarely Encountered Now

This, Along With Other Industrial Diseases,
Is Giving Way Before March of Science

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M.D.
United States senator from New York
Former Commissioner of Health,
New York City

MUCH PROGRESS has been made in the prevention and cure of certain industrial diseases. Great loss of life and permanent physical disability have been reduced to a minimum. For example, "wound-sepsis" disease, also known as "anthrax," is now a rare industrial disease.

At one time anthrax was a common ailment, contracted through the handling of skins, hair, or diseased animals. It was frequently encountered among workers in the hide, hair, bristle, wool, horn and bone industries. Occasionally, it was seen in butchers, veterinarians and farm laborers.

The disease is caused by a germ called the "bacillus anthracis." This germ is found in diseased animals and is easily transmitted to humans.

The infection may be contracted through the skin, lungs or digestive tract.

Workers Protected

Anthrax of the skin is the most common form. The infection usually enters through slight abrasions, scratches or small wounds located on the forearm, hand, neck or face. In butchers or persons who carry infected meat or hides, the infection is apt to affect the neck and shoulders.

When neglected the disease may prove fatal. Fortunately, the law now requires adequate protection for men engaged in industries where anthrax infection may occur.

It demands disinfection of all raw materials in those trades in which horse hair, hides, wool and other similar substances are used.

Workers in leather tanneries, and hair and wool factories, are now protected by the use of rubber gloves and rubber aprons. Proper ventilation is provided to carry off the dust

CONDUCTING SERVICES

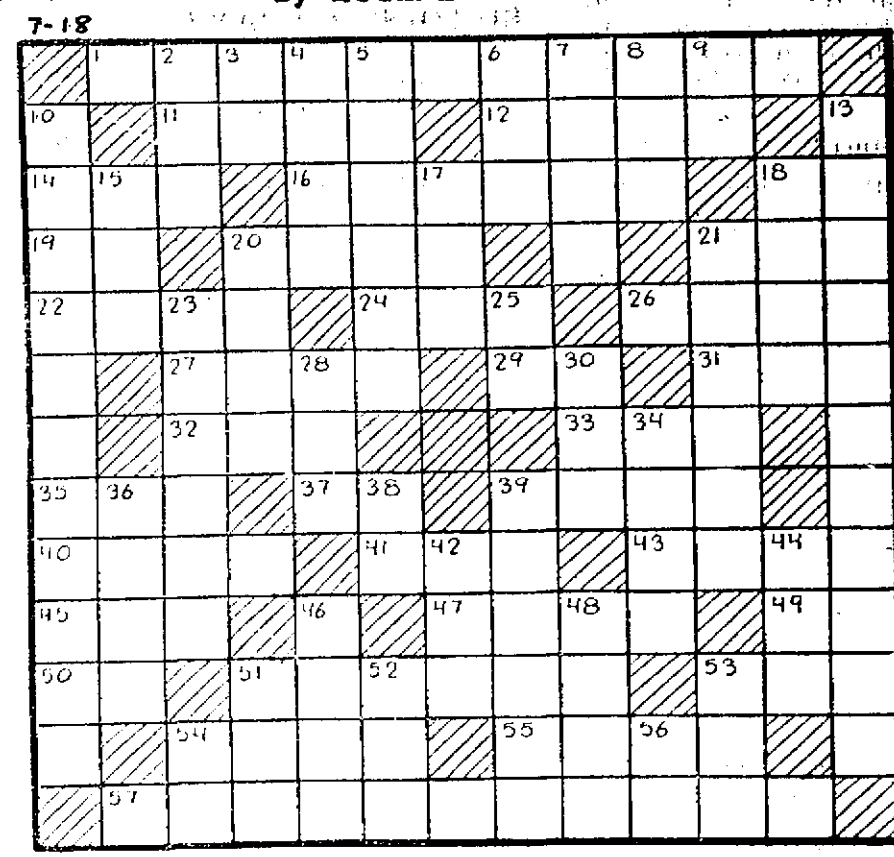

The above three persons are conducting evangelistic services each evening at 8 o'clock at Memorial Hall under the auspices of the local Church of Christ, R. Tibbs Maxey, pastor.

They are J. Marion Small, of Van Wert, (above), and Mr. and Mrs. O. M. Walker, of Muncie, Ind. (below).

Excellent crowds have attended each service so far.

Drivers Who Imbibe

THE automobile driver who drinks to excess is the terror of the road. Death and disaster follow in his wake. But should any driver even taste liquor while he is operating a motor vehicle? Few will answer in the affirmative, and there are some who will contend that the moderate drinker becomes a menace to public safety when he is behind the wheel.

It is undoubtedly a fact that even a little liquor often upsets the balance and normal attitude of the mind, and affects the drinker's operation of a motor car unfavorably. Liquor makes some persons confident. From other persons it takes away confidence and makes them doubtful and hesitating. Liquor does not mix well with the driving of a motor vehicle.

A motor car or truck is not properly called a private locomotive. The driver has to undergo training to operate a machine that weighs a ton and can develop a speed in excess of a mile a minute. If it is essential that locomotive engineers abstain from liquor, then it is essential that drivers of motor cars, which have no rails to keep them in their course, abstain from intoxicating drink. The driver of a car should deny himself the use of liquor whether he rides alone or is responsible for the safety of others.

Probably the most difficult case to treat is that of the driver who does not get drunk with the intention of operating a motor vehicle while in that condition. And these cases seem to predominate. Those who must have their intoxicants should leave their cars in the garage.

Very often a "sound investment" is just a bit of speculation that turned out all right.

Blonde Martyrs

HYGROGRAPHIC records of changes in humidity at McGill University, Montreal, testify to the martyrdom of several un-bobbed blondes of that dominion metropolis. There is a personal sacrifice for science.

None but fine golden hairs can be used on the delicate instrument that records hourly changes in humidity. The hair of brunettes is too coarse. So scientists prefer blondes.

Sensitive instruments are not to be condemned for preferring blondes but they are asking a lot in this day of platinum blondes, peroxide blondes, beach blondes and perfect blondes when they demand blonde strands a yard long. And yet the supply seems unlimited.

If there is such a thing as chivalry in science the blondes who keep the hygrophilic hygrophilic ought to be rewarded. Clear days for jelly making and moonlight nights for love making should be their portion. And if science is grateful it will not delve too deeply and publicly into the possible relationship between the known inconstancy of the weather and the reputed inconstancy of blondes.

Haste makes waste, and speed costs lives.

The work of stabilizing industry and business would make more headway if others would act first.

California professor says college girls should not marry, proving all the comedians are not on the stage.

New Highway Patrol

CHEYENNE, Wyo.—Wyoming's new highway patrol greeted summer visitors attired in their new uniforms of forest green and oak-tan. Gold and blue buttons, in the state's official colors, and the state seal worked on the upper left sleeve, added to the gaiety of the outfits. Sam Browne belts with pistols in the holsters gave military dignity.

"MARY FAITH"

by Beatrice Burton

COPYRIGHT, 1931, BY KING FEATURES SYNDICATE, INC.

SYNOPSIS

Mary Faith, comely young orphan, is secretary to Mark Nesbit, wealthy business man. She gives up her position to marry Kimberley Farrell, shiftless young lawyer. Mary Faith believes that loving a man hard enough will make everything come out all right in the end. It was this confidence that enabled her to marry Kim after he had once broken their engagement. She realizes he has an eye for every girl, but hopes that married life will sober him and make him successful in his profession. Instead, Kim is annoyed at Mary Faith's "Puritanism," and his jazzy friends, Claire and Jack Maldon, find her a dull companion. Learning that she is to become a mother, Mary Faith, for the first time, visits Kim's office. Kim is furious when Mary Faith finds him flirting with his blond secretary. That night, he informs his mother and Mary Faith that he is leaving, Mary Faith, heartbroken at this turn of affairs, decides not to tell Kim of her coming motherhood. She and Mrs. Farrell decide to struggle to keep the home for the coming baby. Mary Faith obtains a position as typist. Due to Mary Faith making good Kim's debt to his former employers, Kim is reinstated.

CHAPTER XXVI

"And are you going to stay here now, Kimberley?" his mother asked him.

"No." His lips came together with a snap. "No—I'm more sure than ever that it was a mistake for Mary Faith and me to be married. I came here tonight because I wanted to talk to her about divorcing me. It's not right for us to be tied up to each other when we've stopped caring for each other. You feel that way about it yourself, don't you, Mary Faith?"

Mary Faith sat in rigid agony on the very edge of her chair, her hands clasped tightly in her lap.

Her dark blue eyes were very big in her white face and there were faint shadows under them. Her lips scarcely moved as she spoke.

"I don't know, Kim."

"You don't know?" He was exasperated. "What do you mean, you don't know?"

"Well, I don't believe in divorce, Kim. And don't you remember what we promised each other the day we were married?—To live together all our lives."

"Look here, Mary Faith, I'm not going to sit here and argue the fine points of the marriage service with you," said Kim, dismissing his marriage vows with a wave of his hand. "I came here to ask you to divorce me. I don't care about you the way I did, and you seem to be getting along fairly well without me. You have my mother on your side."

"You talk as if I were your enemy, and I'm not," Mary Faith interrupted him quietly. "I love you, Kim, and I'm not going to give you up to that Janet-woman without a struggle. Last year when you came to me and told me you couldn't live without me I gave you up—and three months later you married her. Now you want to give me up, and marry her, I suppose. But I think you ought to wait a while and find out how you really feel about her and about me. Time can settle a lot of things that nothing else on earth can settle, Kim."

He lost his temper then. "You talk like a fool," he said, furious with anger. "You talk to me as if I were a child that didn't know its own mind. Now see here, I'm going through with this thing—"

"All right," Mary Faith broke in upon him once more. "You'll have to do it, Kim. I care for you too much to give you up, and besides, I know you'll not be happy with that girl. You don't love her. . . . You just think that you do because she follows you around and it flatters you to have her do it. If you really loved her the way you think you do you would have married her 'way last fall when you were as free as air, Kim Farrell!"

"If you feel like this about her in six months, I'll listen to you, Kim," she said.

She got up and started out of the room, and he looked after her, wondering how a creature so yielding and gentle by nature, could be so stubborn and determined all at once. At the door she turned and faced him once more.

"If you feel like this about her in six months I'll listen to you, Kim," she said. "It's July now. You come to me again in February."

In February the baby would be a month old.

The months of the summer dragged by. Heat shimmered above the pavements of Spring Street every day in a parched August. The long days that were all alike to Mary Faith except that one day she might have lettuce and rye bread sandwiches in her lunch and the next day there might be deviled egg and white bread. One week she might be reading "The Great Gatsby" and the next one she might have "Joanna Godden" open on her typewriter while she ate her lunch.

On the first Monday in September—Labor Day—it rained as it always does on holidays, and Mrs. Farrell went down to Garrettville on the bus to spend a week with Aunt Ella. She came back to town on the following Monday with yards and yards of white cloth of different kinds—flannelette for the baby's nightgowns, sheer muslin for the tiny dresses, and soft cotton for the underthings.

"I bought it down there for half what we'd have to pay for it up here in town," she said as she showed it to Mary Faith. "We'll make it all up by hand, what do you say? I do like to see dainty little stitches in baby clothes."

On the first of October Mary Faith gave up her position with Florio Bond. She and Mrs. Farrell went the rest of that blue-and-russet month cleaning-house and painting a small white bed that they found in a second-hand store on River Street.

In November they settled down to make the clothes for the baby. They ate their meals in the kitchen, and the dining room became a temporary sewing room filled with white garments that made Mary Faith fairly ache with their heart-rending littleness. Little bibs, little jackets, little bibs, little gowns.

Aunt Ella sent a pair of crib blankets up from Garrettville at Christmas—pale blue with white Peter Rabbits running all over them. Jean brought a pair of baby-pins and showed Mary Faith a dozen snapshots that her ranchman had sent to her from Arizona—pictures of pepper trees on a wide street in Phoenix, of the camel-back mountains and several views of a big ranch house with wide shady porches.

"That's where little Jeanie is going to live one of these days," she said as she took them back from Mary Faith. "I'm in love for the first time in my life, and isn't it just my luck to fall for a farmer? That's what a rancher really is, Mary Faith. Can you imagine me living out there in the middle of a thousand acres with nothing to do all day but watch alfalfa grow?"

"You can look at the palm trees and the camel-back mountains," said Mary Faith gravely. "And you'll have your husband—that is, if you really intend to marry this man. I'd live on a ranch with Kim for the next twenty years, without seeing anybody else, if I had to, and enjoy it."

Jean gazed at her, and both puzzlement and awe were in her face. "You are still crazy about that wet smack you're married to, aren't you?" she asked. "Why you ever picked him in the first place is miles beyond me. You could have had 'most anybody. Whatever it takes to catch a husband, you've got it, Mary Faith. Looks and brains and a grand disposition—and if you don't divorce Kim Farrell after this baby arrives I'm going to stop seeing you. I'm disgusted with you, as it is."

And with that she kissed Mary Faith with great affection and went on her way to deliver the rest of her Christmas packages.

MOVIES

AT THE GRAND.

Ultra-modernistic furniture, in recent times the vogue in certain circles, is used extensively in "Parole Girl," the Columbia production with Mae Clarke in the title role, due Wednesday at the Grand Theatre.

It was designed by the Columbia set-dresser, who created sets for such outstanding productions as "King of Kings," and "The Volga Boatman."

This unusual furniture is displayed in apartment house scenes. All of the furniture in the living room is designed around a painting. Each color in the picture is brought out in some particular bit of furniture, which produces a very striking effect.

This is just one of the many thrills contained in Walter Futter's amazing production of high adventure and romance in the Far East, featuring the noted globe trotting author, Richard Halliburton, which appears on the screen of the Cliftona Theatre today and Wednesday.

During one sequence of this talking picture, Halliburton starts on a death defying search for romance. He is led through python jungles into a region swarming with unbelievably great hordes of the deadly flying mammals.

The bats descend about Halliburton in what is literally a cloud. The camera caught one flight that easily numbered a million vampire bats. In one episode the author finds himself insidiously led by one of the creatures. According to the producer of "India Speaks," this is the first time that motion pictures have ever been obtained of vampire bats in action, and the sequence forms one of the most thrilling of the many scenes in the production.

Anthrax, Once Common, Rarely Encountered Now

This, Along With Other Industrial Diseases,
Is Giving Way Before March of Science

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M.D.
United States senator from New York
Former Commissioner of Health,
New York City

MUCH PROGRESS has been made in the prevention and cure of certain industrial diseases. Great loss of life and permanent physical disability have been reduced to a minimum.

For example, "wool-sorters' disease," also known as "anthrax," is now a rare industrial disease.

At one time anthrax was a common ailment contracted through the handling of skins, hair, or diseased animals. It was frequently encountered among workers in the hide, hair, bristle, wool, horn and bone industries. Occasionally, it was seen in butchers, veterinarians and farm laborers.

The disease is caused by a germ called the "bacillus anthracis." This germ is found in diseased animals and is easily transmitted to humans. The infection may be contracted through the skin, lungs or digestive tract.

When neglected the disease may prove fatal. Fortunately, the law now requires adequate protection for men engaged in industries where anthrax infection may occur. It demands disinfection of all raw materials in those trades in which horse hair, hides, wool and other similar substances are used.

Workers in leather tanneries, and hair and wool factories, are now protected by the use of rubber gloves and rubber aprons. Proper ventilation is provided to carry off the dust where hair and wool are handled. This is especially important around carding machines. In addition, the refuse from tanneries and woolen mills is properly disposed of and does not become a menace to the community.

Hair Shaving Brushes

I often receive inquiries concerning the safety of using hair shaving brushes. It is true that at one time the hair used for shaving and lather brushes was a source of danger. Too often these brushes harbored the germs and spores of anthrax.

I am glad to say that the requirements of the United States government and of local health officials call for scientific disinfection of hair used for these brushes. This is accomplished by boiling the hair or bristles for not less than three hours, or by exposing them to steam under fifteen pounds pressure for thirty minutes, or by exposure to streaming steam for not less than six hours.

You can be assured of the safety of your shaving brush by looking for the name or the trade mark of the manufacturer. If the brush does not bear a name or trade mark do not purchase it. If in doubt about the brush, sterilize it for four hours in a ten per cent formaldehyde solution.

Answers to Health Queries

Indebted Reader. Q.—What should a boy of nearly sixteen, 5 feet 11 inches tall, weigh? A: Will my arms develop if I use a resistance producing apparatus?

A.—He should weigh about 150 pounds—this would be about average for his age and height as determined by examination of a large number of persons. 2: Yes; systematic exercise is very helpful toward this end.

Mrs. P. J. W. Q.—I have a useless arm of seven years standing—came on after having had phlebitis and have been told that I can never use it again. Is there any cure which you can recommend in such a case? Or any treatment which might prove helpful?

A.—Systematic massage and general care might prove helpful. Make inquiry at one of the hospital clinics for further information and advice. (Copyright, 1933, E. F. S. Inc.)

A Story For This Spot

By WILL ROGERS

A FELLOW gets cautious, as he gets older. Somebody was telling me about a guy that was getting to where he had a few silver threads among the coal, and he was doing Paris with a man he knew from out west. Well, the fellow with the silver threads got all nervous at a restaurant one evening, and he kept looking at a woman at a table ahead of him.

"What's the matter with you?" says his friend.

"Well," says Silver, "I got a notion that woman with the red hat there is an old sweetheart of mine from Denver. She was a damn sweet girl, too, but I haven't seen her for years. I'm practically sure it's her."

"Well, why don't you walk over and slap her on the back and find out if it's her?"

"I tell you, I'm afraid."

"Oh, pshaw, what's there to be afraid of? Women like to have men pay attention to 'em, and if it ain't her, why you can apologize."

"Yes," he says, "but you don't know this girl. Why, she was so particular that way! If I was to go over and speak to her and it turned out not to be her, I believe she'd hit me with her plate!"

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

After referring to the part played by the Valley during the Civil War when the opposing armies fought many battles for this "Garden of the Confederacy," Dr. Bigelow said:

"Early in the war, business was at a standstill with the fat of the land, running over with schools and colleges, filled with farmers and homesteaders, thriving towns—such is the Valley today."

REPORT SMALLEST CROPS IN YEARS

Total Grain Production Is 13 Per Cent Less Than In Drought Year.

A crop failure greater than that of the drought year of 1930 is the essence of the reports of the 25,000 farmer crop reporters to Uncle Sam's bureau of agricultural economics. Crop prospects in Ohio, however, are reported to be fair.

Reports point to the smallest wheat crop in 40 years, the third smallest corn crop in 30 years, and the smallest oats crop in 40 years. Total production of all grains in the United States is expected to be 13 per cent smaller than in the drought year.

No great shortage of these grains is expected to be felt, owing to the larger than usual carryovers of these grains on farms. In fact, points out C. R. Arnold, extension economist for the Ohio State University, more than half of the huge wheat carryover of the world is located in the United States.

The "fair" crops of grain in Ohio, together with the price rises have given to Ohio crop producers a greater boost in purchasing power than in any other area in the country, according to Arnold.

He points out, however, that dairymen and poultrymen are being pinched between rising grain prices and not-so-fast rising milk and poultry products prices.

Ohio's wheat crop is the second largest in seven years, 28 per cent larger than the average for the years 1926-30. No other state is harvesting anywhere near an average crop.

"SEE SHENANDOAH" IS URGE OF WRITER

"If you have not seen the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia, you have not seen America. For two hundred miles it lies; through and through with rivers big and little, breathed upon by the winds coming down from the hills that have eternally set it apart from lesser lands and places," said Dr. William Frederick Bigelow in an editorial in "Good Housekeeping" magazine.

"If you have not picked out a place for your vacation, and if a place where the population is ninety-eight per cent American-born appeals to you, look up on your motor map the road that leads from anywhere to the Shenandoah Valley," Dr. Bigelow continued.

ations of the Columbus Railway, Power and Light Co., as the latest step by the city in its fight to force lower electricity rates.

Decision to make the study was reached last night by the legislators, who scorned the offer of Ben W. Marr, president of the utility for a small cut in rates.

Disposing of the other principal matter of business coming before the meeting, council passed a resolution to submit to voters at the November elections a proposal to repeal the "Mary Ann" ballot in electing municipal officials.

The decision to appoint a utility engineer for the study followed the presentation of a report by E. W. McCormick, assistant city attorney. In his report, McCormick declared that the city has the right to regulate the price of electric lighting and possibly power rates. Council will now set a rate and submit it to voters as gas franchises are now handled.

NEWS OF HOMES AND HOME FOLKS

VOL. 4. NO. 29. Published by STEVENSON'S Tuesday, July 18, 1933

To the readers of RTT, here is REAL NEWS, especially those that are expecting to invest in a new heater for this coming winter: In next Tuesday's Herald there will be published a proposition that will sound sweet to those that have been wanting and needing a good heating appliance. If you are in that class, you simply can't afford to miss it, nor can you afford to pass it up. Watch for it!

A resident of the north end had us fix up his living room during the past week—new rugs and a living room suite. The "New Deal" is working for him and he wanted to make his home more comfortable and liveable. After all, isn't he to be commended for that? You may have a beautiful house and a wife that loves her family, but she can't make a real honest-to-goodness home out of it unless it is nicely furnished. That is our business—furnishing the furniture for homes. While the prices are at a low mark, why not "fix up" your home?

And then there's that family out in the east end that had us deliver a glider. It's another example of making life more comfortable. Their front porch is their summer living room. Man alive, but one of those gliders are comfort-giving when a "feller" is tired!

And we mustn't neglect the little folks, either! Daddy L. came in the other day and ordered one of our lovely enameled high chairs sent out for his off-spring. With a safety strap to keep the baby from sliding out from under the tray, and widely spread legs on the chair, the child can not tilt over and come to harm. Yes, baby is safe in one of our high chairs.

Another case of taking care of the youngsters: A genuine Taylor-tot was delivered to a home in the east end the other day. Taylor-tots are worth-while articles around children. They can be used as a walker, as a go-cart, or as a kiddie-car. Drop in, Mother, and let us show you.

About August 1st the cotton processing tax of about $2.00 per mattress will go into effect. If you are thinking of purchasing a new mattress, you should attend to that duty at once, if you wish to save some money.

Did a farmer's wife slip one over on her men folks the other day? We'll say that she did! She had us deliver a dainty living room suite to her home and the men knew nothing of it until we drove into the yard. She said that they had been spending money on the farm and tools, and she wanted to spend some on her home. She now has a lovely living room—one that she's not ashamed to take her guests into. Are you proud of your furniture?

I learned about "Toasting" from my husband

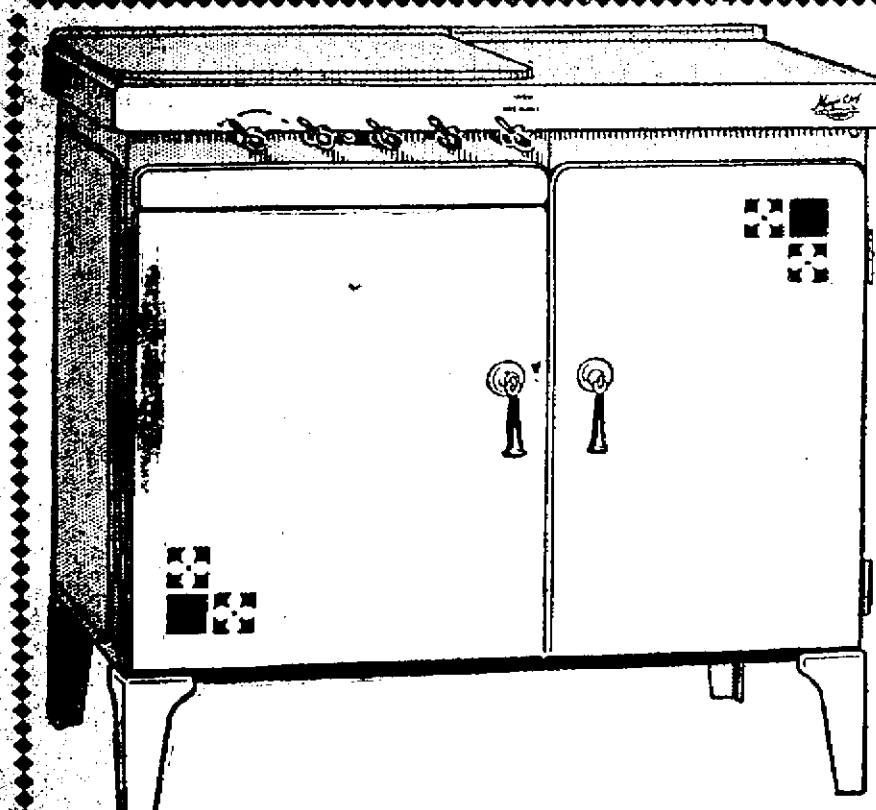

I used to think that "Toasting" was just an advertising phrase. But one day my husband explained to me what "Toasting" is—and what it does. Where he learned it all, I don't know, but I began to understand the difference in cigarettes. Now I find myself enjoying Luckies' mildness and fine taste with a new respect. But even more—since I am a woman quite sensitive to personal daintiness—and since my cigarette and my lips are so intimately related, I especially appreciate the comforting purity of "Toasting". Naturally, with me it's always "Luckies Please!"

To the readers of RTT, here is REAL NEWS, especially those that are expecting to invest in a new heater for this coming winter.

In next Tuesday's Herald there will be published a proposition that will sound sweet to those that have been wanting and needing a good heating appliance. If you are in that class, you simply can't afford to miss it, nor can you afford to pass it up. Watch for it!
